Liquid ferric sulfate is a red-brown aqueous solution. Figure 1: Approximate Specific Gravity of Liquid Ferric Sulfate, at 16°C (60°F). . Liquid ferric sulfate may be harmful if swallowed, and causes severe skin burns and eye damage. Do not breathe mist, spray, or vapors. Wash hands, forearms, and other exposed areas thoroughly after handling.

How do you feed liquid ferric sulfate?

Liquid Ferric Sulfate can be fed with metering pumps, eductors, rotometers, and rotadips or even gravity through a needle valve. Attention must be paid to the materials of construction of the feed equipment, piping, and storage vessels. Most commonly used plastics including polyethylenes, polypropylene, PVC, ABS, Teflon, and FRP.

Ferric reducing antioxidant power (FRAP) assay is a widely used method that uses antioxidants as reductants in a redox-linked colorimetric reaction, wherein Fe^{3+} is reduced to Fe^{2+} . Ferric (Fe^{3+}) to ferrous (Fe^{2+}) ion reduction at low pH causes formation of a colored ferrous-probe complex from a colorless ferric-probe complex.
